

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

5 In a fuel cell according to an aspect of the invention, a fuel cell stack is formed by stacking several cells in which pressure loss is small as compared with normal cells, in the vicinity of an end portion of the stack, which is far from a fuel gas supply port and an oxidizing gas supply port.